TIFF adds small screen lineup

The programmer behind TIFF's fledgling lineup of television series wants to "blow (people) away with the fact they're watching TV on a giant screen with a bunch of people around them."

Michael Lerman said he's not tasked with convincing cinephiles that TV belongs at a film fest. Rather, "I see my job as selling great art to people who appreciate great art."

Expanding on its format, TIFF is adding small-screen stories to its film-festival lineup, a program that will have a permanent home on its slate, said Lerman. The festival runs Sept. 10-20.

> Selling great art to people who appreciate great art.
> Michael Lerman

Anxious to mirror TIFF's programming style of mixing studio pictures with indie and art-house offerings, Lerman went "scouting the globe" for a vibrant mix of TV shows that will fill the big screen with great visuals and compelling stories.

Broadcasters, streaming services and indie filmmakers are all represented in the international mix, with selected episodes of shows from France, Iceland, Argentina and the United States on tap. There will be multiple screenings and show creators and some cast members will participate in Q&A sessions afterwards.

Heroes Reborn, a miniseries reboot from Heroes creator Tim Kring, a comedy directed by Jason Reitman and a documentary about Rolling Stones guitarist Keith Richards by Oscar-winner Morgan Neville are among the world and international premieres in the Primetime television lineup.

"It's all moving image, and there's no reason why you can't put (Mad Men's) Matthew Weiner next to (12 Years a Slave director) Steve McQueen and say they are both auteurs," said Lerman.

Some shows, like Reitman's Casual and Heroes Reborn already have homes on TV. Lerman hopes that, just as with films screening at TIFF, series CROMO (Argentina) and Iceland's Trapped will find wider distribution.

As for French International Emmy-winning supernatural drama series The Returned (Les Revenants), Lerman said he's hooked. (Season 1 is on iTunes.) In the way of all fans who want to share a discovery, he can't wait for Toronto audiences to see the first episodes of Season 2. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

A quirky comedy from Hulu and Lionsgate about young Internet entrepreneur and dating-site creator Alex Cole (The Mindy Project's Tommy Dewey) and his recently divorced therapist sister, Valerie (Michaela Watkins).

CROMO (episodes 1, 2, 8): World premiere. Created by Lucía Puenzo and Nicolás Puenzo, Argentina.

A reality-based eco-thriller about a team of scientists tracking environmental crimes in northern Argentina's dangerous wetlands.

Keith Richards: Under the Influence: World premiere. Directed by Morgan Neville, U.S.A.

Neville creates an intimate look at Keith Richards as he explores the songwriter-singer-guitarist's musical roots and influences while recording his first solo album in 23 years.

Open Streets back after strong pilot

FESTIVAL

Organizers looking to expand route for next year

Luke Simcoe
Metro | Toronto

Whose streets? Your streets.

After a successful pilot project last year, Open Streets TO is back.

This Sunday, and again on Sept. 6, the festival will close portions of Yonge and Bloor to traffic, giving those on two feet or two wheels full rein.

Last year's event drew an estimated 45,000 people over two days. Organizers are hoping for an even bigger turnout this year.

"We were thrilled when last year went so well. It told us there's an appetite for more pedestrian and cyclist spaces in the city," Open Streets TO co-chair Alyssa Bird said.

"We don't want this to be a static thing. We want the route to grow and expand every year."

Yonge Street will be closed from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. between Bloor and Queen on Sunday for the festival. Bloor will be shut down from Parliament to Spadina. Visit openstreetsto.org for more information. CONTRIBUTED

When the idea of an Open Streets festival was first pitched in 2013, Bird and her colleagues faced opposition from politicians concerned the event would grind traffic to a halt.

But the group was able to prove that it wasn't a huge hurdle.

"In fact, it was quite manageable," Bird said.

Open Streets TO has also been a boon for local business.

Based on polling done at last year's event, more than half of the people who attended spent money, and 83 per cent of business owners were in favour of an annual event. If last year was about proving the concept, this year's festival is about building on that success, said Ward 27 Coun. Kristyn Wong-Tam, an early Open Streets champion.

"We want that longer route in 2016," she said. "Maybe we can push as far as Dufferin or High Park. Maybe we can cross the (Bloor) viaduct."

Wong-Tam is encouraging Mayor John Tory to attend the festival — he was present at both events in 2014 as a candidate — and maybe even get on a bike.

"When you look at other cities that have put on successful Open Streets festivals, it's really the mayors who have led the political charge," she said.

DID YOU KNOW?

Open Streets festivals began in Bogota, Colombia in the 1970s and are popular throughout Central and South America, where there are known as ciclovías. Bogota closes 100 kilometres of road every Sunday, and more than one million people take to the streets, said Alyssa Bird, co-chair of Open Streets TO.

Court reverses teacher's sexual abuse conviction

APPEALS

Ontario man's Indonesian nightmare may soon be over

An Indonesian court has overturned convictions against an Ontario teacher and an Indonesian teaching assistant who were serving 10 years in jail for sexually abusing three young children at a prestigious international school in Jakarta, their lawyer said Friday.

Neil Bantleman, 45, from Burlington, and Ferdinant Tjiong were convicted in April by the South Jakarta District Court of violating Indonesia's child protection law and were also ordered to pay a fine of $7,700 or serve six additional months in jail.

Bantleman's family did not immediately comment saying they were waiting for confirmation from the courts.

They maintained their innocence and were supported by fellow teachers and the principal at the Jakarta International School.

They filed appeals to the Jakarta High Court and Hotman Paris Hutapea, an Indonesian lawyer representing Bantleman and Tjiong, said the court overturned the indecency convictions for raping three kindergarten students, now 6 and 7 years old, at the school which is attended by children of foreign diplomats, expatriates and Indonesia's elite. It has 2,400 students aged 3 to 18 from about 60 countries.

> The truth is finally revealed.
> Hotman Paris Hutapea, Indonesian lawyer

"Justice has been done," Hutapea told The Associated Press on Friday.

He said earlier that the rape claims were all about money. The principal and a number of other teachers have alleged the same about the case. The parents of one of the children had sued the school for alleged negligence and were seeking $125 million in compensation.

The arrests of Bantleman and Tjiong in July last year followed reports from the parents of a six-year-old boy who have been sodomized. Four janitors were sentenced to eight years in jail in that case, while a woman received seven years as an accomplice.

Police said a sixth suspect killed himself in custody by drinking bathroom cleaner.

Hutapea said a copy of the higher court decision has to be taken to the district court to start the process of getting his clients released from prison.

Gardiner work to restart

Just as commuters will be clogging the Gardiner on their way to the CNE, the expressway will be undergoing construction.

The city announced Thursday that roadwork will occur along the 800-metre stretch between Strachan Avenue and Bathurst Street starting Aug. 19, leaving only two lanes of traffic available in each direction.

The rehabilitation work, expected to be complete by Oct. 31, 2016, will affect the elevated portion of the Gardiner, which is having its deck and concrete barrier walls replaced.

On Thursday, Mayor John Tory said the closure cannot be avoided. However, he said city officials are investigating ways to get the work done early.

To handle disruptions, the city will use signal timing changes to manage traffic flow on nearby streets, undertake measures to improve the response to incidents in the area and reopen the westbound ramp from Jameson Avenue to the Gardiner, which is usually closed on weekdays from 3 to 7 p.m.

Parapan Am organizers looking for a big finish

#SOLDOUTSATURDAY

Stands should be packed for final weekend

The final two days of the Parapan Am Games could draw the biggest crowds yet as organizers look to wrap things up on a high note.

So far, "the games have been doing exceptionally well," Toronto 2015 spokesman Teddy Katz said.

Several events sold-out since the Games opened Aug. 7. Wheelchair basketball and wheelchair rugby have proven the most popular. Soccer — football 5-a-side for athletes with visual impairments and football 7-a-side for athletes with cerebral palsy — have also drawn large crowds.

Nearly 85,000 of the 200,000 tickets available at the start of the games had been sold as of Thursday, Katz said.

Organizers had never expected to sell them all. Instead, the goal was to draw as much attention to para-sports as possible.

"Many of the Parapan Am sports are newer and still developing, and people hadn't even been introduced to them until now," Katz said. "So this is already a great response."

It helps that the home crowd has been graced with a lot to cheer for. Canada — poised for second place behind Brazil on Thursday — has won more medals at these Parapan Am Games than ever before. Plus, there have been great performances by individual athletes, Katz said.

With an estimated five million people tuning their televisions to the Games across Canada, there's hope the legacy will go a long way.

"I look at these games as a transformational type of experience," Katz said.

"After you see some of these athletes and what they can do, you look at sports in a different way. It's inspiring for everybody."

Navigation tools beacons for visually impaired

A blind computer software engineer from Toronto is giving eyes to those who can't see.

David Best, a former IBM web developer, has just helped usher in the first pilot system in Canada created specifically to help visually impaired people — nearly 200,000 in Ontario alone — navigate the indoors.

A network of "iBeacons" launched last month inside the headquarters of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind (CNIB) in north Toronto could, Best believes, sweep aside travel barriers, boost blind independence and open up worlds beyond the tip of the cane.

"It gives me virtual vision," he said of the iBeacons, a recent Apple device.

Small and inexpensive, iBeacons beam information on a much smaller scale than the older GPS-based voice-over technology that has empowered sight-deprived individuals in the open air for several years.

Smaller than an ice cream sandwich, iBeacons work by sending out Bluetooth signals picked up by iOS or Android products. That signal, recognized by an approaching smartphone or tablet, triggers an audio description, or voice-over, of the immediate area through an app called BlindSquare.

BlindSquare operates intuitively. Shake your iPhone and the nearest address will be read back.

"It's key for getting around the bus route in Calgary," says Team Canada Parapan Am goalball athlete Tiana Knight, a native Albertan.

iBeacons have been used before, but rarely to unlock their potential for visually impaired individuals. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

COMMENT

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

A little more than a minute remains in the first quarter of a Mexico-Brazil wheelchair basketball game. Mexico's Eduardo Prieto falls hard to the floor.

Trying to grab a rebound, the wheels of his chair collide with those of Brazilian defenders, causing him to tip over and land on his back.

You feel the crowd at Mattamy Athletic Centre cringe. After a few simultaneous groans, a deafening silence engulfs the arena. The DJ even quiets the music.

All eyes are on Prieto, who rolls sideways trying to right his chair.

"You know how hard that floor is?" murmurs somebody two rows behind me.

"Oh my God," exclaims her companion.

After a few failed attempts Prieto gets up and wheels around the court. There's big applause. The crowd is elated.

It's a scene that's played out time and again during these Parapan Am Games.

As rowing champ Victoria Nolan recently said, it takes para athletes a lot more energy and effort than their able-bodied counterparts to be where they are.

Regardless of which team you support — there were probably more Brazilian flags than Mexican at the game I saw — you appreciate the athletes' effort more than the win itself at Parapan Am competitions.

Each point scored is truly valued. Like the reaction to Mexico's basket that broke a five-minute scoring drought.

The crowd erupted into chants and enthusiastic claps. You'd have thought it was a tying shot or the game winner. Instead, the scoreboard sat at 40-69, Brazil.

At the final horn, players line up to salute each other and wave to the crowd. It's a sight comparable to the NBA Finals. Some Mexican players are wiping away tears. They've been eliminated. Brazil moves on to the semifinals against Canada.

I'm fighting back my own tears as Prieto and his colleagues wheel themselves back into the locker room to more applause.

There's more heart here than I've ever seen at any basketball game.

Waterfront 'wasteland' eyed for Olympic site

DEVELOPMENT

Activist argues Port Lands could be site for 2024 games

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

An activist fighting "Big Box" development in Toronto's Port Lands is trying to turn the city's potential Olympic bid to his advantage.

Leslieville's Jamie Jennings — who has been fighting plans to build two new big box self-storage facilities on Commissioners Street — is rallying support for a hold on all waterfront development as the city considers playing host to the 2024 Games.

The land makes a prime spot for Olympic venues to be built, he said, equating it to "a wasteland ready to be redeveloped."

"When you go down there it kind of looks like an old Western film, like Billy the Kid just went through and, you know, gunned it all down and it's nothing," he said. "I think there's a real opportunity here to develop it responsibly."

Jennings isn't the only one with the idea.

When Toronto city staff studied a potential Olympic bid last year, the plan was to make the Port Lands the primary site for the Games. The site would include an athletes' village with 17,000 beds and an Olympic stadium with the capacity for 70,000 to 80,000 spectators.

For that to happen, the area needs to be rehabilitated.

Earlier this month, the federal, provincial and city governments, along with Waterfront Toronto, announced $5 million to study the next steps of that rehabilitation: building flood protection; naturalizing the mouth of the Don River; and remediating soil contaminated during the area's industrial history.

Jennings said he became a fan of Toronto's potential Olympic bid when he saw the success of the Pan Am Games — and the potential to spur good development.

> "It kind of looks like an old Western film."
> Jamie Jennings

Mayor John Tory, meanwhile, said he is "nowhere near" deciding whether the city will throw its hat in the 2024 ring.

There's a little more than a month left to enter a bid. Tory met earlier in the week with the Canadian Olympic Committee.

The meeting was simply to gather information about the bidding process, Tory's office has said.

LECENT ROSS

Pair of arrests made during teen shooting investigation

Two arrests have been made in connection to the shooting death of 14-year-old Lecent Ross, police said Thursday.

Investigators have arrested one youth and one 18-year-old in connection to the July 9 shooting death, which occurred inside a Jamestown Crescent home.

Detectives have laid charges, but said they will not release the details of the offences until Friday, when both the 18-year-old and the youth are expected to appear in court.

Lecent was with an unknown number of other youth when she was killed by a single bullet inside a home in a public housing complex.

The .40-calibre Smith & Wesson handgun that killed her was seized by police to undergo ballistics testing to determine if it had been used in other crimes.

In the month since her death, police have not said whether she accidentally pulled the trigger or was shot by someone else.

Days after her death, Ross' mother, Alicia Jesquith, told reporters she needed answers for the sudden death of her daughter, described by friends and family as a vibrant, ambitious young girl who lit up the room.

"Why did this happen to my daughter?" she said. "There's been so many deaths because of the guns. I don't know how many people have to die."

HeartWatch may improve EMS response

The HeartWatch's inventor Frank Nguyen and his mother Lan. Nguyen wanted to design and build a heart monitor that will text emergency services — information including age, medical history and location — if his mother's heart ever fails.

BRIAN B. BETTENCOURT/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Frank Nguyen wasn't like most kids. When he went to school, his heart stayed at home.

That's where his mother was.

He couldn't stop worrying about her. In Grade 6 he confessed that he was distracted by the clock on the wall in his classroom. He'd keep looking at it to see the time, and he'd burn to know whether she was all right.

"My mom started getting really sick," Frank recalled. "I'd be scared she would have problems and I didn't know about it."

The disquiet trailed him for years. Now Frank is 17 and mom Lan, 60, is blind in one eye, partially sighted in the other, and has trouble hearing. She's also prone to bouts of dizziness, has thyroid issues, and was recently referred to a cardiologist for an irregular heartbeat.

Inspired by his concerns for his mother, Frank poured himself into a summer project at a special tech camp at Ryerson University. Now he has a prototype of a working heart-rate alert device that he hopes will one day launch a startup business. Called the HeartWatch, the blocky yellow contraption sits on the wrist and uses a light and sensor to track the heart rate. In the event of a heart attack, it is programmed to send a text message to a loved one or emergency services.

That means no more worrying in the dark.

"I had an idea of trying to make something that could help her, but it wasn't until this year, when her doctor said her heart sounded kind of weird ... That's when the idea of a heart monitor came up," said Frank. "You just hear a lot of statistics about people dying of heart attacks. It's really scary."

Frank and his good friend Andre Bertram have been exploring the heart rate device project for months, but they weren't able to make a prototype until Frank was one of 12 high school students invited to join the Basecamp tech program this summer at Ryerson's Brookfield Institute for Innovation and Entrepreneurship.

The program, which involved high-schoolers for the first time this year, is meant to help aspiring electrical engineers and tech whizzes refine and design gadgets that could one day launch businesses.

Frank and Andre were one of five groups who presented their HeartWatch at Ryerson on Wednesday night. They pitched the device as a piece of wearable technology that has the potential to hasten emergency response times and save lives.

The aspect that Frank is most excited about, however, is the device's ability to essentially call 911. He has set the monitor to detect when someone's heart rate strays outside the normal range. When it does for 50 consecutive "rate checks," the monitor will send a preordered set of information via text message to emergency services, including the person's age, medical history and location, Frank said.

THE LONG TREK TO SUCCESS

It's not easy to do what Frank Nguyen has done. But he chalks it all up to Danforth Collegiate, where he said he learned everything he knows in that school's Math, Science and Technology Program.

Nguyen heard of the program through his own research when he was in Grade 8 at Oakdale Park Middle School. He had to fill out an application form that included his Grade 7 report card and a short essay. Then there was an entrance exam based on the Grade 7 and 8 science and technology curriculum featuring short and long answer math questions.

How does he get there?

It's a long haul from Jane and Finch to Danforth and Greenwood. Nguyen does it every day, hopping on a bus to Downsview Station and riding the subway into the east end, a trek that takes about an hour and a half.

"You get used to it," he said. "Now no other commute feels long."

METRO TESTED

Stumble into Dutch Dreams and you'll feel like you've accidentally entered the Aben family's kitchen. The owners' kids, currently on their summer break, banter happily with customers while mom and dad busily handle cone-prep and paperwork. Photos of famous visitors including Drake and Spice Girl Mel C line the walls, having obviously been tipped off to this kitschy, visually orgasmic local gem. And of course, there's also the ice cream. All flavours are a unique blend of ingredients that can only be found at this shop, and the cone selection alone is enough to challenge any ice cream aficionado. The 25-year-old business has moved to a new location in the same St. Clair West neighbourhood, maintaining every bit of its original charm minus the claustrophia-inducing layout of the past.

Price: 'I learned to hate to lose'

Jays' ace says older brothers made him more competitive

At six-foot-six and 210 pounds, David Price isn't going to be outmuscled by many these days.

But growing up as the youngest of three brothers in Murfreesboro, Tenn., he had to punch well above his weight in order to keep up. Price is more than a decade younger than his brothers, Damon and Jackie. But that doesn't mean they went any easier on him on the basketball court or baseball diamond when they were kids.

"They beat me in everything," Price said earlier this week. "I had no chance."

He didn't like it much at the time, but Price came to appreciate how those days shaped his competitive spirit. "I learned to hate to lose at an early age."

While the tangible talents of the Blue Jays' new ace are obvious, what Price's teammates and former coaches rave about more than anything is his unrelenting desire to win. He may be jocular and easy-going between starts — his Twitter account provides ample evidence — but he's a different guy on the mound.

"When he pitches, he's locked in," said Jays catcher Russell Martin. "He's confident, composed. Just in complete control out there."

Price himself admits he "turns a switch" when he takes the mound.

"I get to play once a week," he said, shrugging. "So I take it personal out there. I want to win. I've been like that ever since I can remember."

On Friday, Price will make his third start for Toronto as the first-place Jays open their highly anticipated — and completely sold-out — series against the New York Yankees, whom the Jays overtook in the standings earlier this week.

The 29-year-old lefty, who has allowed just a single earned run in two tremendous starts since coming to Toronto at the trade deadline late last month, will be trying to keep the Jays' winning streak alive as the club looks to compile 12 straight victories for the first time in franchise history.

Blue Jays star David Price will make his third start for Toronto on Friday as the team opens its sold-out series against the New York Yankees. THE CANADIAN PRESS

In his Toronto debut earlier this month, Price had a sold-out Rogers Centre rocking with a playoff-like atmosphere, which he later described as the best environment in which he had ever pitched. Friday figures to be more of the same as Jays fans relish their first pennant race since 1993.

This is the second time in as many years Price has been picked up as a hired gun for a playoff run. Last summer he was dealt by Tampa — the only organization he had known — to the Detroit Tigers, who had advanced to the league championship three years running and the World Series in 2013.

WORLD SERIES

The Blue Jays are the current favourite to win the World Series, at least according to online bookmakers.

Bodog, an international online sports betting site, is giving the Jays 4-to-1 odds, a little better than the Kansas City Royals, sitting at 5 to 1.

The Jays' chief rival in the American League East, the Yankees, pay 12 to 1.

But, to win the World Series, the Jays have to make the playoffs first, which is looking more and more likely. Baseball Prospectus, as of Thursday, was giving the Jays a 92 per cent chance of swinging into the post-season.

Nigel Wright gets tough grilling

DUFFY TRIAL

PM's former top assistant cites Bible to justify actions

Nigel Wright, Stephen Harper's former chief of staff, denied he secretly gave Mike Duffy $90,000 to repay "inappropriate" housing expenses in order to deceive the Canadian public into thinking Duffy had paid.

Under tough grilling by Duffy's lawyer Don Bayne, who challenged Wright to admit it was all "classic political damage control" by a government determined not to be tarred with a scandal, Wright acknowledged the issue was a potential embarrassment.

But on his second day in the witness box at the Mike Duffy fraud trial, Wright insisted his motivation was the public interest. He said he pressured Duffy to repay because he believed it was wrong on a "moral and principled" basis for Duffy to claim senate money for living in what was his longtime Ottawa home even if he had a "technical or legal" entitlement to make such expense claims.

Wright, a deeply religious man who is also independently wealthy, cited biblical scripture when he told assistant Crown attorney Jason Neubauer that he kept his payment secret from all but a few trusted senior PMO and party officials out of a sense of doing the right thing.

Nigel Wright, former chief of staff to Prime Minister Stephen Harper, arrives with his lawyer Peter Mantas, right, at the courthouse in Ottawa on Thursday for his second day of testimony at the trial of Sen. Mike Duffy. JUSTIN TANG/THE CANADIAN PRESS

"My view is I was helping out, I was doing a good deed. It's sort of Matthew 6, right? You should do those things quietly and not let your left hand know what the right hand is doing," he testified.

Wright said he insisted that his bank transfer of $90,172.24 go to Duffy's lawyer in trust in order to guarantee it went straight to cover the debt owed the public.

> My view is I was helping out, I was doing a good deed.
> Nigel Wright

"I wanted to make my reimbursement in a way that ensured that all of the funds I was providing … would go to Receiver General and so none of it could be used for anything else," he said.

But Bayne attempted to shred Wright's explanations.

He challenged Wright's recollection that Duffy never reported on a so-called pre-budget consultation trip to Vancouver. Bayne produced an email of Duffy's to Wright where Duffy did brief him.

Bayne then challenged Wright's and the PMO's whole approach to the Duffy expense scandal, suggesting it had nothing to do with "morals and principles" and everything to do with ending what the PMO — and specifically Wright — saw as a politically embarrassing, and potentially damaging story.

ELECTION 2015

Liberals pledge billions of dollars to native population

Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau announced his first big-ticket campaign promise today, saying a Liberal government would spend billions to improve First Nations education.

He says a Liberal government would launch a "renewed, respectful and inclusive nation-to-nation process" to close the education funding gap.

With NDP Leader Tom Mulcair away from the hustings and Prime Minister Stephen Harper touting his government's economic philosophy in Saskatchewan, Trudeau found an opening to make a political splash.

He is promising a new investment of $515 million a year in core annual funding for First Nations education, rising to over $750 million a year by the end of the mandate.

He also proposes spending $500 million over three years for aboriginal education infrastructure and an extra $50 million for a fund which helps indigenous students with post-secondary studies.

Harper, meanwhile, is promoting his government's tax-free savings accounts — and warning that his opponents would do away with them and other tax breaks brought in by the Tories.

He said the NDP and Liberals see those breaks as taking money away from government.

Leader Justin Trudeau speaks to supporters during an election campaign stop in Saskatoon on Thursday. LIAM RICHARDS/THE CANADIAN PRESS

"The money doesn't belong to the government, it belongs to you, that's our philosophy," he said.

The prime minister, who has been scrapping with Ontario Premier Kathleen Wynne over her plan for a provincial pension plan, also found himself in a squabble Thursday with Alberta Finance Minister Joe Ceci.

Ceci reacted angrily to Harper's suggestion that Alberta's NDP government is focused on raising taxes during the oil downturn because that's part of their political DNA.

Ceci noted that Harper hasn't balanced a budget since 2008.

While the Mike Duffy trial was still a focus in Ottawa, it had little echo on the campaign. Harper was content to recycle what he has said for months; he thought Duffy had repaid his questioned expenses on his own and when he learned that wasn't so, he took action. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Alberta's fentanyl problem on the rise

CRIME

145 deaths in province tied to drug in first six months of 2015

A recent investigation into the importation of powdered fentanyl from China has prompted the Calgary police, RCMP and Alberta Health Services to once again raise awareness about the increasing quantity and availability of fentanyl in Alberta.

On July 14, a Border Services Officer at a Canadian Border Services Agency (CSBA) in Vancouver intercepted a parcel — declared as a "muffler" — that was destined for a Calgary resident.

Upon examination of the parcel, the officer found an unknown white powder suspected to be fentanyl.

The CBSA Laboratory later confirmed the officer's suspicion, after she sent the unknown substance to the lab.

RCMP then began working with the Calgary police July 22.

A warrant was issued on a Calgary residence, resulting in one arrest. Calgary resident Kasimir Tyabji was charged with one count of importing a controlled substance, police said.

Through the investigation, 122 grams of fentanyl were seized, estimated to be worth $348,000.

This year, the police have had 34 incidents involving fentanyl seizures, compared to only 12 fentanyl incidents in 2014.

> The increase in demand ... is greatly concerning.
> Staff Sgt. Martin Shiavetta

"The increase in demand and resulting increase in availability of this toxic drug within our community is greatly concerning," said Staff Sgt. Martin Schiavetta of the CPS Drug Unit, in a news release. "We are now seeing this extremely harmful drug being used in combination with other drugs, such as heroin, caffeine and xylazine."

Fentanyl fatalities are also increasing, police said.

From Jan. 1 to June 30 there were 145 fentanyl-related deaths in Alberta. Last year, there were about 120 deaths associated with fentanyl in Alberta. METRO

Rally urges action on bullying

Aaron Chatha
Metro | Calgary

Manwar Khan's campaign to stop "bystander bullying" began in 2012 when he witnessed a brutal beating while riding the LRT home from work.

He tried to intervene, but was unsuccessful. The incident sent a man to hospital, where he later died.

On Saturday, Khan is taking the Do Not Be A Bystander campaign to Calgary city hall for a rally aimed at encouraging people to step up and take a stand.

> I want a safer community for my kids.
> Manwar Khan, anti-bullying campaigner

"When I was asking for help, everyone was looking away. No one stepped in to help," said Khan.

"Things could have been totally different if some other people had stepped forward."

Angry and upset, the incident convinced Khan that he had to stand up against bystander bullying in schools and in the workplace.

"You need to say something, do something, get help for that person if you see them being bullied," Khan explained.

"You don't just watch and walk away."

So far he has organized eight rallies in the province.

But for Khan, the motivation behind the campaign has evolved beyond the singular incident that sparked it.

"All this started with an emotion," he said. "I don't want to see my kids get bullied.

"So all I can do is try to do something for this community, where my kids will grow up. If someone asks me, where am I from, I'm going to say Bangladesh. But if someone asks my kids — I have twins — they are going to say they are Canadian.

"This is their country. I want a safer community for my kids."

The rally begins on Saturday at 11:30 a.m. Khan says people are welcome to come and speak on the issue.

11-year-old gives birth in Paraguay

HUMAN RIGHTS

Government denied preteen abortion after sexual assault

An 11-year-old Paraguayan girl who had been denied an abortion gave birth on Thursday, the culmination of a case that put a spotlight on child rape in the poor South American nation and drew criticism from human rights groups.

Elizabeth Torales, a lawyer for the girl's mother, told The Associated Press that the minor gave birth to a baby girl via caesarean in a Red Cross hospital in Asunción, Paraguay's capital. Torales said that doctors told her there were no complications and both the mother and baby were resting. She said that her client, the daughter who gave birth and the girl's grandmother had requested custody of the infant.

"The baby doesn't yet have a name," said Torales.

The girl was allegedly raped and impregnated by her stepfather when she was 10. The stepfather has been arrested and is awaiting trial. The girl's mother has been charged with negligence.

The mother requested an abortion for her daughter, but the government refused to allow it, drawing praise from religious groups but criticism from many human rights organizations, including UN officials. Paraguay bans abortion except when the mother's life is in danger.

At the time, the girl was five months pregnant and local health officials said she appeared to be in fine health.

In a statement Thursday, Amnesty International said the organization was glad the girl had come through the birth, but the fact that "she did not die does not excuse the human rights violations she suffered at the hands of the Paraguayan authorities."

While the case did spark some discussion about abortion in the deeply conservative country, the focus of several protests was on better protecting children from abuse.

Many called for stiffer penalties for abusers, and the funding of education programs to help parents and authorities better spot signs of abuse.

Norma Benitez, spokeswoman for the Latin American Women's Commission, said her group would now push the government to provide a safe environment for the girl that includes both her mother and grandmother.

"The Paraguayan state must fulfil its role of protecting children by providing a home and a dignified life" for this family, she said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

600

Each year, about 600 girls 14 or younger become pregnant in Paraguay, according to local statistics.

A 13-year-old mother holds her one-month-old in May at a shelter for troubled children in Ciudad del Este, Paraguay. The girl said she was raped by her stepfather from the time she was 10 and became pregnant at 12. Human rights organizations say underage pregnancies are a major issue in the South American nation. CHINA

Explosion death toll hits 50

The death toll from the fiery explosions at a warehouse of hazardous chemicals climbed Thursday to 50, and the Chinese government sent experts to the shattered and smouldering port to assess any environmental dangers from the spectacular blasts.

More than 700 people were injured and dozens were reported missing in the explosions shortly before midnight Wednesday that demolished a workers' dormitory, tossed shipping containers as if they were toy blocks and turned a fleet of 1,000 new cars into scorched metal husks. Windows were shattered for miles around by the shock waves.

There was no indication of what caused the disaster in one of China's busiest ports, and authorities tried to keep a tight rein over information by keeping reporters well away from the site. Social media users complained their posts about it were deleted.

More than 1,000 firefighters were sent to the mostly industrial zone in Tianjin, a petrochemical processing hub east of Beijing.

The municipal government, which gave the death toll of at least 50, said 701 people were injured, including 71 in serious condition. The Tianjin Port Group Co. said dozens of its employees were unaccounted for and a search is under way. Some migrant workers at the port may not be documented. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Greece vote down to wire

ECONOMIC CRISIS

Lawmakers wrangle all day and night over rescue package

The Greek government defended its new bailout program in tumultuous parliamentary sessions Thursday, as Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras faced a rebellion in his governing Syriza party ahead of a vote on the deal. The bill for the three-year rescue package worth about 85 billion euros ($93 billion US) in loans includes harsh spending cuts and tax hikes that Tsipras has said he has no option but to implement.

Lawmakers wrangled over the bill for about nine hours in an acrimonious parliamentary committee debate that began in the morning, with delays arising from amendments submitted to the original bill and procedural objections by those opposing the measures.

Finance Minister Euclid Tsakalotos stressed the urgency of the vote, with eurozone finance ministers to discuss the deal at a meeting Friday afternoon in Brussels.

As the debate in parliament was set to last most of the night, with a vote early Friday, Tsipras spoke on the telephone late Thursday to French President Francois Hollande and European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker.

Despite the repeated delays in Greece, lawmakers in Finland authorized the country's prime minister to finalize Greek bailout negotiations on behalf of his country — an indication that eurozone lenders were moving toward finalizing the deal.

The Syriza rebellion has left Tsipras dependent on opposition votes in parliament to pass legislation, and the bill is expected to win approval comfortably. Hundreds of anti-austerity protesters marched through Athens in anticipation of the plenary debate Thursday evening.

Tim Hortons says it's taking action to combat knock-off products such as the "Tim Mortons" instant coffee spotted in South Korea this week.

Canadian Mike Elgar posted a photo of bags of Tim Mortons Mocha Gold Coffee Mix on Instagram on Sunday. He found the 'Tim Mortons" coffee packages in the Dongdaemun Market shopping district in Seoul, South Korea.

The fraudulent coffee uses a logo that is nearly identical to that of the coffee chain.

Tim Hortons spokeswoman Michelle Robichaud said the company is thrilled to see that its brand is recognized all over the world, but added that the company will be vigilant in protecting its intellectual property.

Robichaud said the company will take the steps necessary to protect its trademark but did not specify what those might be. Tim Hortons has no outlets in South Korea.

THE KOHLER REPORT: ON WHEN CLEAN IS A BAD THING

If we exfoliate everything 'bad' from our lives, how will any of us know how to deal with bad things when they happen?

While it might be a good idea to use antibacterial soap between touching one of those bars on the subway and licking your hand, it's well known that overuse of such products is actually bad for us. Exposure to some bugs is good for the immune system. Plus, germs see the soap as a challenge to ensure their next generation will be soap- and antibiotic-resistant superbugs.

Which makes me wonder about what is increasingly an antibacterial approach to our society's emotional well-being.

This week, 40,000 Canadians signed a petition to have the American "pickup artist" Roosh V banned from the country. Though I understand why we'd want to limit our contact with someone who lectures men on how to improve their "intimate relationships with women" (eww) when he isn't blogging about how rape on private property should be legalized, I'm kind of glad the petition failed. Sure, Roosh V, whose name sounds like a strain of bacteria, is a disgusting pig, but I think exposure to him does us good.

If we try to exfoliate everything that is "bad" from society, how will any of us know how to deal with bad things when they happen? As a chubby tween, I endured some mild bullying in middle school. While I could have used less of that, the experience equipped me with coping mechanisms, such as the art of the witty retort, as well as the knowledge that life can suck, especially when someone pees in your gym shoes.

I'm not pro-bullying, but I do believe bullies will always exist — haven't you read The Lord of the Flies? — and it's naive to think you can create a culture free of them.

Roosh V is a bully, and banning him would not have taught him any lessons or done us any favours. In fact, he might have seen it as a challenge ("Not only do women not want to have sex with me, now they try to ban me from countries") to turn from a mere misogynist into an outrage- and activism-resistant super-misogynist. The super-misogynist is dangerous. Instead of love, his heart is full of insecurity, misguided hatred and traces of Viagra. He's found in the corner of a party, offering backhanded compliments to a woman he is trying to bed. ("You're hot. It's too bad your face isn't a little prettier"). He's like a regular misogynist, but wears a cape with a logo of a barefooted pregnant woman and shoots darts at Malala Yousafzai's face.

I say invite people like Roosh V into our "body" so that our "immune system" can wear them down. Take this past weekend, after Roosh V's lecture in Montreal. A group of women followed him, called him names and doused him in beer. There's a video online if you (like me) think there's nothing sweeter than watching a bully get lightly bullied.

Roosh later tweeted about having been assaulted by a "Montreal feminist," but I call her an "antibody."

Metro weighs in on the news making headlines this week

Cyclists allowed to run red lights with relish

The City of Light is notorious for showing no love to those on two wheels. Cyclists contend with aggressive drivers who fail to signal and who stop in the middle of the road to pop out for a baguette. Bikers respond by blazing through red lights with impunity. Instead of cracking down on this, Paris is installing signs at 1,800 intersections informing cyclists they're free to sail through red lights to go straight or turn right. While critics may cry favouritism, officials hope more people will bike if they're not afraid of being caught beside trucks and buses as they wait for lights to change. SOURCE: BBC

A viral victory very long-awaited

If you've ever known a toddler with a nasty cough the doctor says is "just a virus," you've likely seen respiratory syncytial virus (RSV). It sweeps through daycares and old-age homes every winter, and there's little treatment or prevention. But that could change. After 50 years of flops, scientists at Oxford University have published the first successful RSV-vaccine trial in humans, raising hopes that medicine can quash one more ubiquitous and dangerous germ. Poachers take a terrible toll on turtles

A shell-shocked community on Mexico's southern coast is battling sea turtle poachers. Olive Ridley sea turtle eggs sell for $1 US each, and thousands are buried along Oaxaca's shores. The beaches were once protected 24/7 by marines — but they were called away in 2014 to help deal with Mexico's escalating drug war. The result: Heartbreaking video footage of poachers raiding turtles' nests. Environmentalists say 80 per cent of the threatened species' eggs are being stolen. SOURCE: REUTERS

Messenger intern's mischief managed

He solemnly swore he was up to no good ... and Facebook agreed. Harvard whiz-kid Aran Khanna had his internship offer from the social-media giant rescinded after he built an extension that tracked his friends' locations on a Harry-Potter style "Marauder's map." He used Facebook Messenger's location data, which is not hard to find if you know where to look. Facebook said he violated the code of ethics, but subsequently disabled automatic location-sharing. The company wasn't charmed by Khanna's insistence he was trying to highlight privacy issues. SOURCE: PC MAG

If a shooting is targeted, it's not any less tragic

A man and a woman were shot dead in a nightclub in Toronto on Aug. 4. They were killed at the after-party for Drake's OVO Fest, and the story has led newscasts all week.

The first question I had was this: Was it random?

I'm always hoping it's not. If it's targeted, I feel safe. If it's targeted, it's also less tragic in the eyes of the media and the public. When two people are shot — one a target, one not — this is made sharply clear.

Ariela Navarro-Fenoy has been mourned as an "innocent bystander" in the press, Duvel Hibbert deemed an "intended target" — as if a target can't be innocent.

There are reasons I'm more calmed by targeted shootings, and it goes back to evolutionary theory, said Pamela Rutledge, a professor of media psychology at Fielding Graduate University in California.

"We have a biological imperative for survival, for safety," she said. We want to know that the world is not chaotic, "which of course it is."

If someone was a target, that means we're safe. "We don't have to be so afraid. And we can then intellectualize: 'We have too much violence in society,' and that kind of thing," Rutledge said.

We look for things — most often people — to blame. "The more we put the blame on the victims, the less we need to worry about uncertainty."

We tell all kinds of stories to distance ourselves from our own sense of fear, Rutledge said. Simplistic stories. Stories like: Hibbert had a criminal record, and so maybe he had it coming, and Navarro-Fenoy, innocent damsel though she was, put herself in harm's way by going to a nightclub where drug dealers hang out.

The stories are not about the root causes of the drug trade, or about race or poverty. They are not about why someone might decide to deal drugs. Or join a gang. Why they would enter a dangerous world like that.

Yesterday, Hibbert's mother gave a statement: "No one deserves to die this way, under any circumstances. As a family, we're struggling to understand what happened at the club that night, and how our son could die so tragically."

He was 23. Navarro-Fenoy was 26. No, neither of them deserved to die like that. Not someone who goes to nightclubs, not someone charged with drug-trafficking offences.

Rutledge said there's no point beating ourselves up for reacting instinctively and, at first, for blaming the victims. But there is also no real justification to stay in that primal place. We know better.

Rihanna now a key adviser on The Voice; Tina Fey has a new show, says NBC

O 'Shea Jackson plays his father, Ice Cube. HANDOUT

INTERVIEW

Ice Cube couldn't be prouder of son

O'Shea Jackson Jr. was determined to play his father, Ice Cube, in Straight Outta Compton.

Not only does the 24-year-old look like his dad, but he's also got the rapper-turned-movie star's mannerisms and expressions down — something he used to his advantage.

Jackson Jr. makes his acting debut in Straight Outta Compton, opening Aug. 14. The film captures the rise and rupture of N.W.A., the group credited with starting gangster rap and inspiring warning labels on album covers for its provocative, incendiary lyrics. Founding members Ice Cube and Dr. Dre are among the film's producers.

Father and son sat side by side to talk about the role.

What's it like seeing your story told by your son?

Ice Cube: I'm proud on a thousand different level. I'm just proud of the production. I'm proud of the movie. I'm proud of the group. I have never been this happy for any project that I've ever done.

Kids often think their parents are dorky. Did you feel that portraying your dad as a teenager?

O'Shea Jackson Jr.: The only thing that would be remotely like that would be the lingo of the '80s, just the things that they said that were 'in'. ... No pun intended: Ice Cube's the coolest dad.

Was there anything you didn't want your son to know about you?

Ice Cube: Seeing my son getting roughed up by the police is not fun. It brings back memories of when I got roughed up by them. He grew up totally different than how I grew up, and to me, he shouldn't have to go through that. But in a movie like this, and to understand really what we all went through, I'm glad that he did feel the tone of what we went through. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Under the N.W.A. gangsta hood

STRAIGHT OUTTA COMPTON

Biopic follows rise and fall of hip-hop's rebels

IN FOCUS

Richard Crouse

Straight Outta Compton is the legendary album by gangsta rap group N.W.A, released Aug. 8, 1988. It's a sonic blast that plays, as Rolling Stone said, like a "bombastic, cacophonous car ride through Los Angeles' burnt-out and ignored hoods." It became the first platinum album to reach that status with no airplay or major tours and now it's also the title of a biopic that documents the group's beginnings and turbulent history.

Writing for theverge.com, Lizzie Plaugic observed, "It's impossible to talk about N.W.A without talking about South Central LA in the late 1980s." Infected by crack and gang violence, the area was so rough the LAPD created a special unit known as CRASH — Community Resources Against Street Hoodlums — and it was these surroundings that helped birth the ferocious beats of Straight Outta Compton and a genre known as gangsta rap.

Music is unavoidably influenced by the surroundings of those who make it and music biopics have always been quick to use location as a shorthand to help the audience understand how and why musicians produced the music they did.

Just as South Central sets the scene for Straight Outta Compton, Manchester's drug-fuelled "Madchester" club scene of the late 1980s and early '90s informs 24 Hour Party People and the mean streets of Brooklyn set the stage for the meteoric rise of rapper Notorious B.I.G. in the 2009 film Notorious.

There is no shortage of John Lennon or his birthplace on celluloid. There are five official Beatles movies, documentaries like The U.S. vs. John Lennon, a 2006 movie that focuses on Lennon's transformation from musician into antiwar activist, and even experimental short films like the John and Yoko shorts Two Virgins and Apotheosis. Portrayed by everyone from Paul Rudd (in Walk Hard: The Dewey Cox Story) to Monty Python's Eric Idle, rarely has any actor captured both Lennon's rebelliousness and vulnerability as Aaron Taylor-Johnson does in Nowhere Boy, the story of the musician's formative years.

Taylor-Johnson, recently seen in blockbusters like Avengers: Age of Ultron and Godzilla, is aided in his performance by a gritty portrait of Lennon's lower-working-class neighbourhood in Liverpool, England. You can almost smell the bangers and mash coming off the screen and the vivid Merseyside backdrop provides subtle clues about the man Lennon would become.

Set back when you could still drink a bottle of stolen booze in the shade of the Hollywood sign without being arrested for trespassing, The Runaways focuses on two glue-sniffing, glam-rock obsessed tough girls named Joan Jett (Kristen Stewart) and Cherie Currie (Dakota Fanning). Disaffected SoCal teens, they see an exit from their mundane suburban lives through rock 'n' roll. Unfortunately their ticket out comes in the form of impresario Kim Fowley, a record producer and self proclaimed "King Hysteria." He cobbles together the band, trains them to be rock stars, convinced that they will "be bigger than the Beatles." Before they can play Shea Stadium, however, the band breaks up — knee deep in ego, drug abuse and bad management. Set in and around the Sunset Strip's late 1970s seedy underbelly, the movie perfectly captures the sun-dappled decadence that illuminated the time.

In the movies, like real life, it's about Location! Location! Location!

Teen love and losing it on screen

SEX SCENES

Powley plays a young girl on the verge of womanhood

Matt Prigge
Metro in New York City

Powley and Skarsgard play forbidden lovers in Heller's The Diary of a Teenage Girl. HANDOUT

Bel Powley and Alexander Skarsgard are sitting on a bed. It's appropriate, in a mildly weird way. In their indie dramedy The Diary of a Teenage Girl, the film they're here to talk about, they play, respectively, Minnie, a teenager in first blush with her sexuality, and Monroe, her mother's boyfriend, with whom she is sleeping. (The mother is played by Kristen Wiig, who is not present.) They have the kind of goofy rapport that comes with actors who've had to fake intimacy through real trust.

"I'd never done a sex scene onscreen before. Alex was my first onscreen kiss," Powley says, dispensing a laugh Skarsgard shares. "He took my onscreen virginity."

Powley, a young British actress with English TV and theater experience, found herself transplanted to America, specifically 1976 San Francisco, making a film that could be uncomfortable but wasn't. Part of the potential discomfort was the sex, but part of it was also working with a first-time filmmaker, Marielle Heller, with a deep history with the project. Based on Phoebe Gloeckner's graphic novel-cum-diary, it was something Heller had already turned into a stage production, in 2010, herself starring in Powley's role.

"This had been her baby for eight years," Skarsgard explains. "But there was no ego involved at all. She was collaborative. She encouraged us to take control of our characters."

As for Powley, she found herself in the position of playing the very character once portrayed by the person directing her.

"People always have to remind me of that," she confesses. "It was never Marielle saying, 'Oh, when I did it I did it like this.' I was never worried I was emulating her version of Minnie."

Though the role called on Powley to do some uncomfortable firsts, Skarsgard wasn't off scott-free. He had to play a 35-year-old sleeping with a) a high-schooler and b) his girlfriend's daughter.

While The Diary of a Teenage Girl arrives in a climate that seems more receptive to having conversations about women's issues as well as sexuality. It's still an outlier.

"People don't make movies or talk about female sexuality," Powell says. "They're such taboo subjects. With the rise of 'New Feminism,' it's a very good time to be making a movie about young women wanting to have sex, and normalizing it. It's very important for teenage girls to have that normalized. Otherwise you can feel really ostracized."

"If you reverse this, and it's a guy doing all that in a movie, you have to think: Would I judge that?" Skarsgard points out.

"There are so many movies about men wanting to get laid and men being promiscuous and men wanting to lose their virginity," Powell says. "Why not make one about women?"

In America, Powley was an unknown before The Diary of a Teenage Girl but she already has films lined up, including A Royal Night Out and Equals. She also made Detour. She's had other offers too.

"The stuff I've been sent has been really good," she says, though she adds, "People sometimes misconstrue when I say I want a strong female role. They're like, 'OK, how about a Marvel superhero?' I don't mean that kind of strong. I just mean a well-rounded, real, fleshed-out person, who isn't just there because of the dude."

THE TV DINNER JESSICA ALLEN

No one in my family read my teenage diary, because the first page of it says: 'Please close this if your name is not Jessica R. Allen.'

The trouble with committing private thoughts to paper is that someone is bound to read them.

In The Diary of a Teenage Girl, the film based on the graphic novel set in the '70s that opens in select theatres on Friday, 15-year-old Minnie (Bel Powley) writes about losing her virginity in her diary. Her mom Charlotte (Kristen Wiig) reads the entry. Ouch.

But the hits just keep on coming: Minnie lost her virginity to her mom's 35-year-old boyfriend (Alexander Skarsgård.)

No one in my family read my teenage diary, because the first page of it says: "Please close this if your name is not Jessica R. Allen. I will discontinue my relationship with anyone who attempts to read this. You have been warned."

Also, I wrote things like "One rose with a 100 thorns is life." Nobody wants to read that. Or this: "Captive/Slave to my emotions/So far to fly/ So far away/But it feels so close/Time to fly"

But the diary occasionally comes in handy. For example, I know that I got my braces off on Halloween,1990; I dropped $50 on LPs for my dad's birthday in 1991; and a few months after that I was "still going out with Todd."

God, that's such a good name for a high school boyfriend, isn't it? "Todd." Anyway, things seemed to have taken a turn for the worse on Todd's birthday. It was "a nightmare."

THE MOVIE: The Diary of a Teenage Girl

THE MEAL: Steak Frites

Why? "First, his outfit didn't match and we were going to a fancy restaurant" — The Olive Garden? "Second, he wasn't hungry, and third, he complained the whole night."

"Wow," I wrote, "he sure knows how to show a girl a good time."

Things have certainly changed: Not only have I abandoned the practice of signing each journal entry with my signature — like I was signing a cheque — I've also been in a 11-year-long relationship with a well-dressed man who is always hungry.

Simon, who thinks he lives in a Ralph Lauren catalogue complete with yachts, ranches and safaris, may care more about fashion than I do. But when it comes to dinner decisions, he concedes to me.

After a weekend of assembling Ikea wardrobes, we went to The Ace, our favourite local restaurant, for Sunday night dinner. He wanted the fried chicken. I couldn't decide between that and the steak frites. Possessed by a moment of genius, I ordered the steak frites for us to share as an appetizer and we both had the chicken for our mains.

I wrote about the furniture assembly victory in my journal and recorded the great meal and eccentric shirt via a time-stamped, geo-located photo. And yet I still don't know how young people today manage the compulsion to keep public diaries via social media.

But I do know this: Minnie, it gets better.

Losing his religion to Teen Lust

Richard Crouse
Metro | Life

Blaine Thurier's parents are OK with his day job as synthesizer player with the indie supergroup The New Pornographers but they probably won't go be seeing his new movie.

"I had an evangelical upbringing," he says, "so anything sexual you weren't allowed to talk about and you certainly weren't allowed to do anything about it. It can be very frustrating for a kid. The trauma of that has inextricably linked sex and religion in my brain. Everything I write these days seems to be about that."

His new film, Teen Lust, is an homage to the teen comedies of the 1980s. The main character Neil (Jesse Carere) is determined to lose his virginity on the eve of his 18th birthday. The surprise is that he's desperate to have sex, not just because of any natural desires, but because his parents are part of a Satanist cult led by John (Cary Elwes) and his wife Mary (True Blood's Kristin Bauer van Straten) who plan on sacrificing Neil to prevent 1,000 years of peace on earth. Imagine Porky's with a dollop of Rosemary's Baby.

"I won't even tell them what it is about," he says, adding, "It's weird, but it is me trying to be normal."

"I wanted to make a teen sex comedy but there are so many of them out there I felt it needed higher stakes and a little twist. I also wanted it to be a funny adventure, like Ferris Bueller, Back to the Future or Risky Business. They were touchstones. Stylistically it doesn't look like any of those films but story-wise, I wanted to have a big night of comedic adventure."

> It's weird, but it's me trying to be normal.
> Director Blaine Thurier

The Manitoba-shot movie debuted at last year's Toronto International Film Festival in the Contemporary World Cinema program. It was Thurier's fourth visit to the fest and he was pleased with the response he received.

"If they laugh," he says, "I'm happy. You wait for that first laugh. Once you get the first laugh it's like, 'OK, I can relax now,' because if they found that funny they'll probably find something else funny too."

Canadian filmmaker Blaine Thurier plumbs the sexual repression of his evangelical childhood for a twisted coming-of-age film about a teenage son born into a Satanic cult. CONTRIBUTED Claridge's Hotel in London is the kind of place you might expect a secret agent to call home. An unassuming entranceway leads into an opulent lobby with lots of quiet corners perfect for clandestine meetings. It's the kind of place where Napoleon Solo and Illya Kuryakin could do highly classified business over a martini, shaken or stirred.

So, it's appropriate I'm meeting Henry Cavill and Armie Hammer here. They're the stars of The Man from U.N.C.L.E. reboot and the latest actors, after Robert Vaughn and David McCallum, to play super spies Solo and Kuriatkin.

The TV show, which was equal parts camp and classic action, ran from 1964 to '68, made stars of its leads and established high-flying spy cool for a generation of television watchers. Cavill, who plays the suave Solo, however, says he has never seen the show.

"I prefer to operate as a blank canvas," says Cavill, who will next be seen as the Man of Steel in Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice. "If you're trying to make something your own, you're concentrating on the wrong thing. You should be concentrating on the story and evolving the story with your fellow actors and or director. That's what we did."

His co-star Hammer referred to the show partially to craft his portrayal of the hothead KGB spy Kuryakin and partially "out of motivation of fear."

"If I do this movie and someone asked me about the show, I wanted to have an answer to give them," he says. "I basically spent the weekend binge watching the whole show."

He says the new movie incorporates elements of the original show, "so people who grew up with that will love and appreciate it, but it is also a completely fresh take on it. That's what we were going for, to make everybody happy."

Like many spies (and actors who have played spies) before them, both utilized accents and costumes to disguise themselves and disappear into their roles.

Cavill, notes that the bespoke Savile Row suits he wore were the "final pieces of the puzzle" in creating the character.

"The accent informs the way you physically interact with everybody and the suit the contains that."

Hammer learned his accent listening to "old recordings of native Russian speakers trying to speak English, or barely speaking English and picking up little bits of both.

At a certain point with the accent, I'd say after a week or two, it feels natural. You're not spending your time making sure your words sound laboured. It starts to flow out as an accent."

INTERVIEW WITH DIRECTORS

Farley documentary doesn't dwell on the dark

As the directors of the new documentary I Am Chris Farley put it, the film doesn't follow the late comedy star into the "dark room." While it delves into the addiction issues that led to his drug overdose death at age 33 in 1997, it doesn't dwell on them.

"That story has been told in the tabloids," says Brent Hodge, who directed with Derik Murray. "We really wanted to celebrate this guy's life."

The doc opens Friday in Toronto and airs Sept. 7 on The Movie Network and Movie Central.

Screenshot from I Am Chris Farley. VIRGIL FILMS

How did this documentary come to be?

Murray: I guess it really started about 18 months ago. I reached out to Kevin Farley (Chris's brother) through a mutual individual, a friend of mine in Los Angeles. I went down and spent time with Farley.... And Kevin, basically after a few meetings, felt that the film that we wanted to make was the film that the family would absolutely support.

He seems to come from this really all-American family.

Hodge: Yeah, Americanarama, as his sister says, exactly what you dreamed of in the 1960s.... They were all lawyers and bankers, the Farleys, and dad owned a Scotch Oil business. But Chris decided to be the one that got into theatre.... He was a ready-to-be-made star.

The interviews, some of them are so emotional.

Hodge: I think that shows Chris's work and how loved he was in Hollywood amongst these guys ... and it's a tragic death, so they get to have some closure by bringing it up and talking about it.

France's ancient 'art gallery'

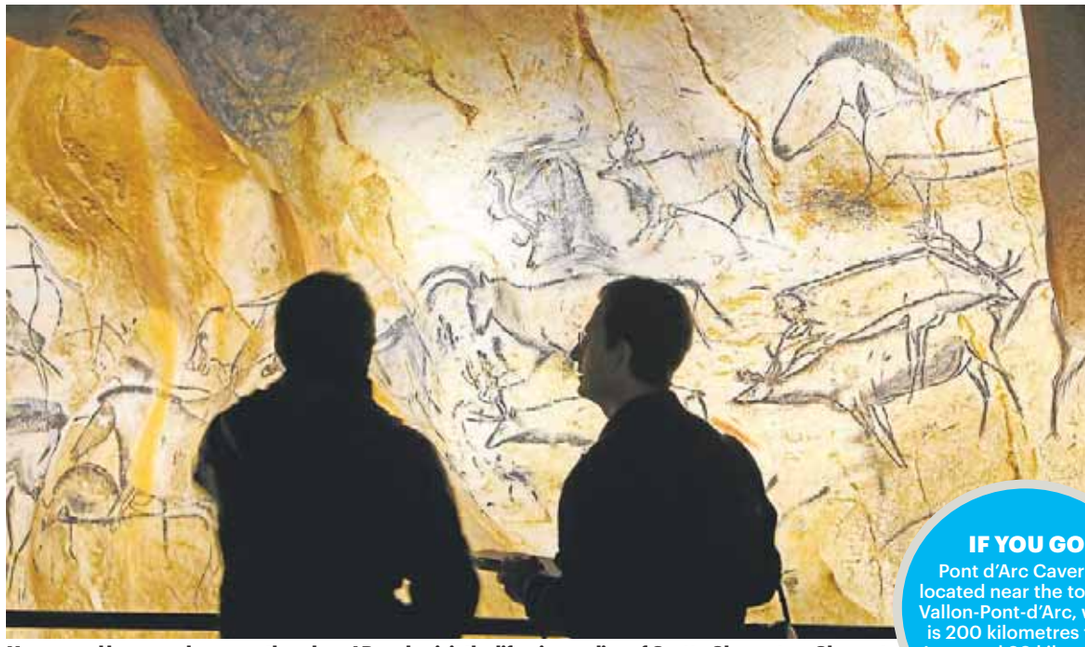
PONT D'ARC CAVERN

Prehistoric paintings recreated from disputed cave

Jean-Marie Chauvet noticed air whistling out from a crack on a plateau in southern France, so he and fellow cave enthusiasts went to investigate. What they found that Sunday in 1994 still fills Chauvet's voice with wonder: an immense cave covered with prehistoric paintings of horses, mammoths and rhinos — paintings so vivid, he says, it felt like the Stone Age artists had just moments ago put down their ochre and walked away.

The discovery of the long-hidden artwork created a sensation, but the site was quickly closed to the public. Just by breathing, tourists could erode the images.

Since most modern humans will never get to see the masterpieces in what is widely known as the Chauvet Cave, scientists, artists and the French government have spent 56 million euros (about $80 million) and several years creating the next best thing: a near-exact replica of the cave about two kilometres away, including more than 400 paintings of horses, bears, rhinoceros and mammoths, hand prints and carvings. Experts even recreated stalactites and stalagmites from the original site, as well as the cool temperatures and thick smell of humidity, in Pont d'Arc Cavern. The site opened to the public earlier this year.



Horses and bears and mammoths, oh my! People visit the life-size replica of Grotte Chauvet, or Chauvet Cave, in Vallon-Pont-d'Arc, near Bollène, southern France, in March. CLAUDE PARIS/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS FILE

In a rare interview, Chauvet described digging through narrow passageways and guiding a flashlight in the blackness until one of his fellow spelunkers came across "the two lines of red ochre. That's when it started."

"What impressed us," Chauvet said, "was the freshness.... The paintings are as if they had just left, these men, these women" who painted them. "And the deeper you go, the more grandiose. It's really an art gallery."

Questions surrounded the exact date of the paintings, now widely believed to be between 30,000 and 37,000 years old. That means they were the oldest human cave drawings known at the time of the discovery. Since then, scientists have determined that cave drawings in El Castillo in Spain were painted at least 40,000 years ago.

Chauvet fought years of legal battles against the French government over rights to the discovery, and is still seeking royalties. Officials with the Culture Ministry were convicted of falsifying documents to make it look like he was on official duty when he found it; he insists he was on holiday at the time.

Today the site is officially managed by regional and national government authorities, and it doesn't officially bear the discoverers' names, to Chauvet's dismay.

Authorities say they are putting the public's interest first.

Pascal Terrasse, a legislator in charge of the replica project, described being the first government official to enter the original cave soon after the discovery: "We understood that we had to quickly protect it, and ensure that it was never opened to the public" to protect it from "carbonic gases" from visitors, he told AP.

Experts have recorded more than 1,000 images from the walls of the cave, inscribed last year on UNESCO's World Heritage List. German filmmaker Werner Herzog brought the original cave alive in a 3D film, Cave of Forgotten Dreams.

The replica tries to reproduce as much of that as possible. Millimetre by millimetre, scientists and artists used the same tools and techniques believed to have been used in the Stone Age.

It feels strange at first, a bit like an amusement park. But a similar replica — of the 18,000-year-old cave drawings in the Lascaux caves in southwest France — draws about 300,000 visitors yearly.

Organizers hoped for similar crowds at the Pont d'Arc Cavern, despite the remote locale in this striking but little-travelled corner of southeast France.

The next step, Terrasse said, could be "a virtual version, 3D, something that could move around" — and bring prehistory to generations looking to the future. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TIME CAPSULE

The paintings in Chauvet Cave were remarkably well-preserved thanks to a rock fall about 23,000 years ago that concealed the site. The conditions kept the drawings in such a pristine state that some researchers doubted their authenticity. "This cave wasn't exposed to gusts of violent air," Chauvet said. "It was preserved, like in a jar."

PARIS OF THE PRAIRIES

Discovering a top museum, Top Chef flavours in Saskatoon

ON THE MOVE
Loren Christie

A recent weekend trip to Saskatoon was a delightful surprise. I discovered an attractive, vibrant city with a youthful, friendly population, hip bars and restaurants, and top-notch museums.

Play

The South Saskatchewan River not only bisects the city but is a focus for people's activities. While kayakers, rowers, jetboaters and sightseers aboard The Prairie Lily paddle-wheeler enjoy time on the water, the downtown side of the river offers pathways for walking and biking to those who prefer to be on solid ground.

The parks along the river host a seemingly endless series of events. During my visit the music of Erykah Badu and Wyclef Jean performing at the SaskTel Jazz Fest filled the air.

The Western Development Museum is one of the best museums I have seen. The principle exhibit is Boomtown, a recreation of a typical prairie town circa 1910. Kids will love the opportunity to chat with blacksmiths, sit in a vintage car and dress up in the photography studio.

A little further out of town, the Wanuskewin National Heritage Park has been a gathering place of the Northern Plains Indians for 6,000 years. Explore the archeological treasures found along 360 acres of scenic trails or get a lesson in hoop dancing in the Visitor Centre.

Eat and drink

Shortly after winning Top Chef Canada, Dale MacKay convinced several key staff including general manager and mixologist Christopher Cho to leave Vancouver and help him turn a 110-year-old heritage building in his hometown of Saskatoon into Ayden Kitchen & Bar. The vibe is the epitome of hip; I counted seven beards and eight man buns on the staff. The menu is locally focused with a modern flair. I had the charcuterie plate (all the meat is ground and prepared on site) and delicious trout caught from Lake Diefenbaker.

If you are looking for a tipple, Broadway and 10th has some great rooftops and patios for people watching and the slowly gentrifying area around 20th Street has some fun tapas and cocktail bars.

Stay

The Delta Bessborough is a former railway hotel that looks like a mini version of Banff's Fairmont Springs and, like that hotel, dominates the surrounding skyline. It's a beautiful hotel and perfectly situated. Other options downtown include the Sheraton Cavalier and The James Hotel, the city's first boutique hotel.

4 HOSTELS TO STAY AT ACROSS CANADA

Inexpensive online lodging websites like the hugely successful Airbnb may be quickly turning into billion-dollar enterprises, but traditional hostelling still has its modest, dollar-for-dollar charm. BRITISH COLUMBIA

Jericho Beach Hostel

This Vancouver hostel may have originated as army barracks back in the 1940s, but its ideal location is what lures many road-weary travellers these days. Located away from downtown's hustle-and-bustle in the popular Kitsilano neighborhood, Jericho Beach is laid-back lodging that boasts the ocean as its playground and the mountains as its backdrop. "You're literally a stone's throw away from the beach," said Sy. "It's a very ideal location for what Vancouver is known for in terms of the water, mountains and the view."
Price: Starting at $30/night.

ALBERTA

Banff Alpine Centre

Banff National Park is renowned for its incredible beauty, and this gorgeous lodge nestled at the foot of Mount Rundle is a beautiful bargain. As if its rustic café, the popular Storm Cellar pub, and free transportation into the nearby Banff weren't already tempting enough, consider the deer and other wildlife you'll wake up to just outside your window. "It's got that mountain chalet feel for a very affordable price," said Sy. "For someone who's not used to the Rockies, it's a very humbling experience to be there because you're right at the mountains." Price: Starting at $30/night.

NOVA SCOTIA

Cabot Trail

Halfway along the stunning Cabot Trail, this intimate hostel is the perfect rest stop for drowsy drifters after a day of exploring Cape Breton Island's scenic roadway. Well-reviewed, the cabin-like quarters may only accommodate 19, but it's nearby whale-watching, beaches and fresh-caught lobster make it a wonderful retreat. "That's one of our smaller hostels," said Sy. "Not a lot of travellers will be able to set aside the time to do an excursion like this but when they do, they're rewarded."
Price: Starting at $25/night.

ONTARIO

Ottawa Jail Hostel

Want to know what it's like to sleep in a jail cell for a night? Ottawa's Jail Hostel is a historic 150-year-old prison that still features stone walls, steel bars and is rumoured to be haunted. Conveniently located in downtown Ottawa, accommodation also includes free breakfast and Wi-Fi. However, ghost sightings aren't necessarily guaranteed. "That's probably our most unique (hostel)," admitted Sy. "(And) if you don't get the chance to book one of the jail cells, you can always tour the facility — downstairs where you'll see the dungeon area and all the way to the top."
Price: Starting at $29/night.

Win streak goes to 11 on strength of Buehrle outing

THURSDAY In Toronto

4	2
BLUE JAYS	ATHLETICS

Blue Jays lefty Mark Buehrle doesn't throw 90 m.p.h., he doesn't lead the league in strikeouts and he isn't a power pitcher.

Yet he's respected by teammates and beloved by fans as much as any pitcher in the game right now. And if there was an example as to why, it came in Thursday's 4-2 Jays' victory over Oakland before 46,902 at the Rogers Centre.

Buehrle didn't have his so-called "best stuff." He worked out of two early jams and fought past two comebackers — one off his right hand, the other his left forearm — to last into the eighth inning on a day he probably should have been gone long before that.

The fans game him a standing ovation when he exited the game two batters into the eighth. They knew he not only outmatched a very good A's starter in Jesse Chavez and a pesky hitting lineup, but he was pitching on an extra day's rest due to some wear and tear on his 15-year veteran body.

They also know that in sweeping Oakland and pushing their winning streak to 11 games, Buehrle's afternoon was all about leadership, the kind that makes such winning streaks possible.

"It's always a fun day when he's on the mound ... he's a magician out there, always has been," said Jays shortstop Ryan Goins, who smacked a three-run homer as part of a four-run second inning that gave Buehrle all the support he'd need to climb to 13-5.

Buehrle noticed the show of respect from the fans, who rose in unison when Jays manager John Gibbons took him from the game after 95 pitches.

"Gibby stepped out of the dugout and I wasn't even looking, then I heard the fans and they were going crazy before he got to me ... that was amazing," Buehrle said.

The leadership he sets is well-known; he's been instrumental in Marcus Stroman's introduction to the big leagues and has influenced every young pitcher to come through the Toronto clubhouse since he was acquired in the massive 2013 trade with Florida.

For the first time since that trade, the Jays are contenders for the division lead. They've won 14 of 15 since the all-star break and overtaken the Yankees for the division lead.

In an example of his leadership, Buehrle changed the channel on the clubhouse TV's last week when they began showing Yankee game telecasts.

"It's Aug. 12 and I know some players are scoreboard watching, but I don't think we need it on in our clubhouse, watching every single game the Yankees play," Buehrle said "If it's the last week of the season, then it's a different story. But it's Aug. 12, turn on something else."

The Jays, meanwhile, got big production from bottom of the order guys in Kevin Pillar and Goins and have now hit homers in 12 straight games and 24 of 25 since the all-star break.

The starting staff, though, has allowed three or fewer earned runs in 16 straight outings — the best streak of its kind for the Jays since a run of 18 games in 1991.

ATTENDANCE

Rogers Centre's cheap seats don't come cheaply

The Toronto Blue Jays are set to hit new highs in secondary market ticket sales for the season as the New York Yankees visit this weekend.

Thursday's game drew 46,902 fans to Rogers Centre, the team's seventh full house of the season. Even still, the secondary market for tickets for the crucial weekend series with the Yankees has seen prices continue to climb.

According to SeatGeek.com, a website that aggregates prices from other ticket resale brokers, all three games of the weekend series are more expensive than any other Blue Jays home game this season.

The average cost to see Toronto ace David Price start against the Yankees on Friday climbed to $91 over the past week. The average price is $103 for Saturday's game and $87 for Sunday.

Two weeks ago a ticket for Friday's game in the upper bowl at Rogers Centre overlooking the outfield cost $13. That same ticket has now climbed to $56, meaning just to get in to the stadium the price has more than quadrupled since the beginning of August. The lowest price isn't any cheaper on Saturday ($60) or Sunday ($58).

WHAT MAKES DAVID PRICE SO GOOD?

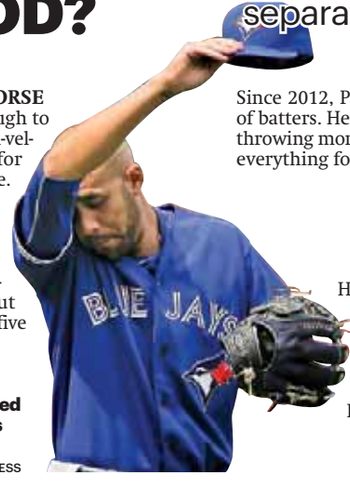
Harry Pavlidis, an analyst at Baseball Prospectus and founder of pitch-data-crunching company Pitch Info, delves into what separates the 29-year-old lefty from the pack. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

95

SOUTHPAW POWER
Price's average fastball velocity is 95 m.p.h. "So he's head-and-shoulders above a typical left-handed starter," Pavlidis says. "And he's strong enough to sustain that throughout a game."

WORKHORSE
Price is fit enough to maintain a high-velocity fastball for an entire game. He's also a durable workhorse who has thrown more than 200 innings in all but one of the past five seasons.

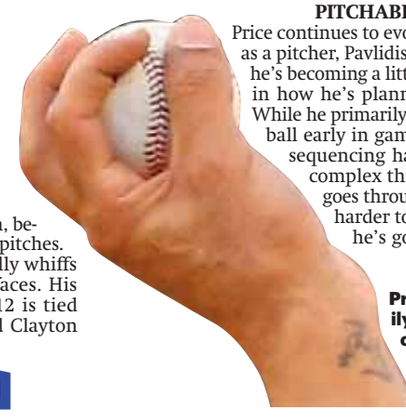
Price has pitched 161 innings this season.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS



COMMAND
Since 2012, Price has walked less than five per cent of batters. He's the only pitcher to do that while also throwing more than 800 innings. Pavlidis: "He throws everything for strikes and where he wants them to."

K-MAN
He doesn't have a signature strikeout pitch, because he gets strikeouts with all of his pitches. He led MLB in Ks last year and typically whiffs nearly a quarter of the batters he faces. His 4.96 strikeout-to-walk rate since 2012 is tied with Chris Sale for third-best, behind Clayton Kershaw and Cliff Lee.

PITCHABILITY
Price continues to evolve and improve as a pitcher, Pavlidis says. "It appears he's becoming a little more nuanced in how he's planning his games." While he primarily leans on his fastball early in games, Price's pitch sequencing has become more complex this year. "So as he goes through the game, it's harder to figure out what he's going to throw."



Price has steadily increased his changeup usage each year.

A heavy medal day at the track and pool

PARAPAN 2015

Golds continue to rush in for host nation

Canada continued its successful run at the Parapan Am Games on Thursday with multiple gold medals in the pool and on the track.

Wheelchair racer Brent Lakatos of Dorval, Que., won his second gold medal of the Games, taking first place in the T53 800-metre race. Kyle Whitehouse of St. Catharines added a gold in the men's T38 200.

Meanwhile, Canadian swimmers added 10 medals to their impressive haul, including golds by Aurelie Rivard of St-Jean-sur-Richelieu, Que., in the women's S10 100-metre backstroke and Sarah Mehain of Vernon, B.C., in the women's S7 50 butterfly.

Canada also added a gold in cycling with Daniel Chalifour of Mont-Laurier, Que., and his pilot Alexandre Cloutier of St-Antoine-de-Tilly, Que., leading a Canadian sweep in the mixed time trial B. Robbi Weldon, of Thunder Bay and Montreal's Audrey Lemieux claimed the silver and Saskatoon's Shawna Ryan and Joanie Caron, Rimouski, Que., took the bronze.

Charles Moreau, of Trois-Rivieres, Que., won the bronze medal in mixed time trial H1-5 while Toronto's Shelley Gautier took silver in the mixed time trial T1-2.

Canada won 21 medals in all over Thursday's morning and afternoon events to bring its total to 134 (42 gold, 47 silver, 45 bronze). Brazil led with 80 gold and 196 total medals while the United States was third with 32 gold and 107 total.

Lakatos thought he had wrapped up the T53 800 title when he crossed the line first when the race was originally run on Wednesday, but a crash and a subsequent disqualification forced a re-run.

"We go out there and we've got to be focused when we're doing it," he said. "We have no idea what's going to happen so you have to be prepared for everything, you can't be thinking about what happened yesterday or last month.

"Just went out there and did it."

He finished with a time of one minute 43.90 seconds, ahead of the Colombian pair of Edisson Martinez Sarmiento and Jesus Aguilar.

Lakatos won the 100 metres earlier this week, and could add another gold in Friday night's 400 metres.

Whitehouse said he rode noise from the home crowd to a Parapan Am record time of 23.66 seconds.

"Without the fan support, I wouldn't have been able to win the gold here," he said.

Rivard continued her dominant performance in Toronto, winning her fifth gold medal of the Games. Rivard took the S10 100 backstroke in a Parapan Am record time of 1:09.72.

Mehain won her third medal of the Games, and first gold, winning the S7 50 butterfly in 37.07 seconds.

PGA CHAMPIONSHIP

Johnson dusts off trademark hot start

Already tied for the lead, Dustin Johnson was in position for more Thursday in the PGA Championship. He was in the fairway on the par-5 second hole at Whistling Straits and faced a "perfect 3-wood" to reach the green for a sure birdie or even better.

So he laid up with a 5-iron.

"I wanted to try to make today as easy as possible," Johnson said. "And it worked out."

He made birdie and opened with a 6-under 66, giving him a one shot lead after Day 1. It's the fifth time in 13 rounds at the majors that Johnson has had at least a share of the lead.

Just not on Sunday.

And that's why he wanted to get off to an easy start. Even in the midst of his best year in the majors, Johnson has had a hard time.

Dustin Johnson GETTY IMAGES

Nothing stung more than the U.S. Open at Chambers Bay, where three putts from 12 feet on the final hole took him from a chance to win his first major to a runner-up finish behind Jordan Spieth. He had the 36-hole lead at the British Open until a 75-75 weekend.

And one round into the PGA Championship, here he is again.

"We'll just have to see what happens. It's only the first round. We've still got a lot of golf to play." Johnson said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PREMIER LEAGUE

Far from boring start for Mourinho

How Jose Mourinho must long for the days last season when Chelsea was being goaded for being "boring." The start to the new campaign has been anything but mundane at Stamford Bridge.

Tumult has replaced apparent tranquility after losing the Community Shield to Arsenal and starting the Premier League title defence with a draw to Swansea.

A win over Manchester City on Sunday, though, would quickly transform the mood surrounding the champions.

The Chelsea medical team was decried by Mourinho for being too eager to race onto the field on Saturday to treat Eden Hazard. The move left the team briefly with only nine men as Chelsea chased a winner versus Swansea. Later this week, Mourinho removed doctor Eva Carneiro from her matchday role.

FIFA medical chief Jiri Dvorak expressed disapproval for Mourinho's decision on Thursday. "Everyone involved has to respect the fact the doctor is in charge," Dvorak told Sky Sports television.

Bencic pulls off another upset

Belinda Bencic leaned against the back wall on the grandstand court at York University's Aviva Centre on Thursday afternoon and tried to forget about her frustration from the previous two hours.

Needing to hold serve to force a tiebreaker and keep her strong run at the Rogers Cup alive, she held a steely gaze as Sabine Lisicki had her wrist taped on the other side of the net. Bencic had already knocked off Caroline Wozniacki and Canada's Eugenie Bouchard this week and wanted her German opponent to be next.

The medical timeout gave Bencic a chance to collect her thoughts. When play resumed, there was no stopping her.

She held serve at love — capping the game with an ace — before giving up just three points in the tiebreaker for a 6-1, 1-6, 7-6 (3) victory.

"In that moment actually I really tried to go for it," she said. "I served better and I'm happy that I could play my best in the important moments."

The two players were evenly matched and employed similar styles. Strong ground strokes often set up aggressive winner attempts but both players had their struggles with unforced errors. THE CANADIAN PRESS

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
Be adventurous and start something new. However, make sure that you have prepared the ground thoroughly. Leave nothing to chance.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
You may be a bit irritable with certain people, but try not to let it get to you. Forget about the little things and focus on the bigger picture. Petty people and petty annoyances are not worth the time or effort.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Today's new moon will make it easy for you to get your point of view across. However, you would be wise to spell things out as simply as possible. Not everyone sees as clearly as you.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Where money and business are concerned it is essential that you meet others halfway. Also, don't think you can promise something today and wriggle out of it tomorrow: if you fail to deliver your reputation will suffer.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
You are able to see things clearly and communicate effectively. But that does not mean you can take everything others tell you at face value. You may be honest but are they?

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You may feel a bit downbeat at the moment but it's quite natural for you at this time of year. It would be surprising if you were the life and soul of every party.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You fear something because you don't understand it. Today's new moon will help you to overcome fear by finding out more about what is causing you so much anxiety.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
A new moon in the career area of your chart will make you even more ambitious. However, before you make any major moves you would be wise to check facts and figures.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Any doubts you have had about what you should be doing with your life will disappear today. At last you know which road you should be following and how to make your life both more secure and more exciting.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
There may be no end of interesting things going on but you must block them from your mind today and focus on the one thing that means something to you. Everything else is a distraction.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Don't let colleagues focusing on your bad points provoke you. Chances are they want to start a fight because they think it will benefit them. Don't play that game.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Why are you still holding back? You fear you may upset people whose support you have always depended on in the past. The simple fact is you no longer need them.
